At Minute Women, our Memory Care Professionals go beyond providing basic care. They build genuine relationships that support each client's dignity, comfort and quality of life.

BACKGROUND

Linda lived alone in her longtime Wellesley home with dementia, falls, hallucinations and sundowning.

A previous agency had left the case after saying her needs were "too difficult."

Her family wanted her to remain at home but feared a nursing facility might be the only option.

CHALLENGE

Linda needed more than personal care and supervision. She needed consistent caregivers who could reduce anxiety through engagement, reassurance and redirection.

Caregivers walked with Linda, prepared meals with her, watched birds from the back deck and connected through conversations about family, the Red Sox and the Celtics.

As Linda became more settled, care was reduced from 16 to 12 hours per day.

OUTCOME

Linda remained in the Wellesley home she loved for two years.

She continued enjoying familiar routines, spending time outdoors, preparing meals and watching her favorite Boston teams. Her family experienced less stress and could spend time with Linda as family rather than managing every part of her care.

When Linda entered hospice, care increased to 24 hours a day so she could remain at home through the end of her life.
